

MAKING THE MOST OF YOUR SPACE

Modern living means making the most of our outdoor space. Space is at a premium in cities and new build properties have notoriously small gardens.

With garages nowadays being utilised as extra storage for bicycles and outdoor pursuits many homes don't have room for the equipment needed to maintain a garden. With apartment living rising in popularity rooftop gardens are an ideal way for an urban gardener to expand their space.

Use all of your space wisely

For roof terraces: It is important to ascertain what is already on your roof. Asphalt is often the material used as it creates a waterproof barrier for the property. Removing the asphalt is often not an option so a shock pad is laid under the artificial grass to minimise any lumps and bumps made by the asphalt and give the grass a very soft feel underfoot. Another important benefit of using artificial grass in your roof garden design is that it's very low maintenance. Once installed, your lawn won't require watering or mowing. This makes artificial grass the ideal choice for a low maintenance, big impact roof garden and gives you the perfect opportunity to create a stunning space you can enjoy all year round.

Balcony Areas: Often flats and apartments have balconies that are barely used. By adding artificial grass, a play area can be made leading directly out from the main living rooms providing an extra 'play room' for children.

Side returns: Side returns often sit in the shade inhibiting grass growth. Installing artificial grass can create a clean children's play area.

Without the need for a shed to store mowers, seating areas can be built to really make the most of the new space.

Often patios are too small for a table and chairs, extending the patio and laying artificial grass within a 4m width space can often be a cost-effective way to transform your outdoor space.

In a small shaded courtyard garden, an artificial grass lawn adds colour and gives a traditional look that doesn't need year-round sunshine.
